I've always dreamed of working in comic books. Drawing was my first love; I was trying to draw Spider-Man and Batman as soon as I could hold a pencil. I spent many grade school nights listening to Full Moon Fever while rendering Wilce Portacio X-Factor covers with my friend Aleric, flipping the cassette tape over and over for hours on end. I slowly started trading the pencil for the guitar as grade school turned into high school, eventually going full guitar with only the occasional once-every-couple-years "serious" doodle. I never did get the chance to put together a comic book and always planned on trying if the opportunity presented itself. Well, this is what I have been working on since April 2020, trying to remember all the old tricks and learn some new ones along the way after decades of absence from the craft. This book also serves as homage to some of my favorite characters and my favorite comic book series as a kid, one that always reminded me of the original 1950s 'Twilight Zone' television show, Marvel's 'What If...' series. The ever-present images emblazoned on my adolescent mind from the 1980s movie experience also invokes it's influence over these pages.

Thanks for risking a look,
Bill Lee G.
